There are several ways you can control styles in Midjourney (An AI image generator)

1. Write style/artist names in the prompt
   - Art movement/Style names: Impressionism, Dadaism, Cyberpunk, ...
   - Artist names: Picasso, Monet, ...
   - Video/Game Companies: Disney, Nintendo, ...
   - ......
2. Use sref (style reference) code
   - Imagine that Picasso's artistic style exists somewhere within Midjourney's vast style universe. It's hidden behind a style code, something like #abcdefg000. It is a parameter you can put in the prompt to control style of image generated.
   - Even the AI developers don't know exactly which code matches which style
   - Users can experiment with random style codes and eventually find out which code represents Picasso
   - And then they can make this code public and call it "Picasso sref"
   - There's an active community of users who search for and document these hidden styles
